PERSONAL STATEMENT OF RESEARCH INTERESTS

My research is focused on the elucidation of new mechanisms that link aging to inflammation and cardiovascular disease (CVD), with an especial interest in the pathophysiology of atherosclerosis and heart failure. Within this setting, my current main line of research is aimed at investigating the potential causal role of age-related somatic mutations in blood cells in cardiovascular and metabolic disease. The accumulation of somatic mutations over time is a hallmark of aging in many tissues, particularly in highly proliferative tissues such as the hematopoietic system. It has been estimated that a middle-age individual carries on the order of 1 million different acquired mutations in the hematopoietic stem cell pool, which sets the stage for a robust Darwinian selection of mutations that provide a competitive advantage to the mutant cell. This phenomenon, known as somatic mutation-driven clonal hematopoiesis (CH or CHIP), has been associated with an increased risk of atherosclerotic CVD, suggesting the provocative hypothesis that somatic mutations in blood cells contribute to atherosclerosis and related cardiovascular conditions. Testing this hypothesis using a combination of human studies, animal models and cell culture experiments is the main objective of my research (Science, 2017; Cell Reports, 2020; JACC 2021; Nature CVR 2023; Nature Medicine 2024; European Heart Journal 2024). Other ongoing research projects in my laboratory are related to the identification of new inflammatory drivers of atherosclerosis and other cardiovascular conditions through the analysis of extreme atherosclerosis phenotypes in human cohorts.
